

Family Support Providers are expected to help families learn about the resources available to them in their community.

Session 19

Recovery Oriented Systems of Care

teaches family support providers the elements of ROSC and ways to link families to resources that can help them.

Resiliency Goals vs Outcomes

In the past resiliency was thought to be achieved through obtaining specific outcomes prescribed by people other than the individual in recovery.

Based on whether or not families were achieving prescribed outcomes, they were considered successful or not successful in their recovery. Now, we rely on SAMHSA's definition of recovery as previously covered in this training:

“A process of change through which individuals improve their health and wellness, live a self-directed life and strive to reach their full potential.”

Now, families are responsible for identifying their own resiliency goals. While certain outcomes are still important to many people in resiliency, not all outcomes will be necessary or desired for all individuals.

Discussion question: What outcomes might be desired by some families in resiliency but not desired by others?

Recovery Capital

Recovery capital is the quantity and quality of internal and external resources that can be mobilized to initiate and sustain long-term recovery (Granfield and Cloud, 1999).

Types of Recovery Capital

- Physical capital: things, financial assets
- Human capital: values, skills, knowledge
- Family/social capital: supportive relationships
- Community capital: resources, culture, opportunities

Discussion question – what are some examples of recovery capital from your own life?

Passive and Active Linkages

Family Support Providers link families with resources in many ways.

Passive Linkage – Resource list given to families (family support provider's presence not required)

Active Linkage – Direct contact made for or with a family (family support provider's presence required)

It is vital that resources are kept up to date, as they can change so often. Active linkage ensures that families stay aware of the most accurate information on available resources in their community.

Group Activity: Using the space below, come up with 5 examples of passive linkage and 5 examples of active linkage. Share your examples with the group when prompted by the instructor.

Notes:

Recovery Oriented Systems of Care:

Recovery-oriented systems of care (ROSC) are networks of formal and informal services developed and mobilized to sustain long-term recovery for individuals and families impacted by behavioral health disorders. The system in ROSC is not a single agency but a collection of organizations within a community, a state or a nation.

As a family support provider, you may discover that some organizations do not work together the way that it seems they should. Part of your role as a family support provider could be working with organizations to encourage them to work with your families to make resources available and accessible.

Elements of a ROSC:

(these are positive elements to have in organizations you include, but not all are necessary for every organization)

<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ♣ Person-centered ♣ Family and other ally involvement ♣ Individualized and comprehensive services across the lifespan ♣ Community based ♣ Continuity of care ♣ Collaborative relationship ♣ Strengths-based ♣ Adequately and flexibly financed 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> ♣ Culturally responsive ♣ Responsive to personal belief systems ♣ Commitment to family recovery supports ♣ Inclusion of the voices of those in recovery ♣ Integrated services ♣ System wide education and training ♣ Ongoing monitoring and outreach ♣ Goals-driven ♣ Based on research

Important: ROSC is a template that can be used in any community. However, information added to the template will be community specific.

Session 19 – Review Questions – Recovery Oriented Systems of Care

1. True or False – Family Support Providers can make an active linkage by providing a family a phone number for a local agency.

2. True or False - An important role of the family support provider is to create goals for individuals in resiliency.
